

WILL YOU MARRY ME?

A question is asked for the purpose of clarification or for effect and emphasis like in the case of a rhetorical question. When a question is asked question it is assumed that ignorance or knowledge deficiency in that subject is predominant.

If the aim of a thing is not defined abuse becomes inevitable, before embarking on anything worthwhile it is advisable to have the end of such an endeavour in mind. Every journey has its terminal point, so also is a well defined relationship.

Being in a relationship or 'Going out' (as it is now called) with someone is ought to be towards an end, before two matured adults consent to establishing a relationship it is believed that they both have the blueprint of the relationship in mind and know where the relationship is heading except otherwise, probably they're in the relationship for either ulterior motives, to pass time, just to do it cause every other person is doing it, for pleasure or any other reason.

A relationship is a serious, passionate attachment meant for serious minded people, it requires commitment, trust, sincerity, honesty, love and ultimately the fear of God among other virtues. Now a days relationship is abused and not seen in the real sense of the word, people get super-intimate without knowing why they are doing what they are doing and obviously without an end or an expectation in mind, little wonder there are increasing cases of heart breaks and shaky marriages.

The question 'Will you marry me?' is not to be heard from anybody who claims to be in relationship. How can a guy who's been going out with this gorgeous lady for quite a while be proposing to her? It's like having someone ask you 'will you graduate?' after apparently spending the required number of years in the university, or being obviously heavily pregnant and someone asking; will you deliver?

If a relationship had been pre-defined and it is known that the relationship is to grow towards marriage, that question will not arise. It's only when a guy just meets a lady and lusts after her, without a proper knowledge of her or without courtship he pops the question, but when two adults have been dating for what seems like forever, then having the guy popping the question to the lady and she jumping all around in excitement that the guy finally asked her to marry him, that's utter foolishness!

Trust Nigerians, they're very good at copying EVERYTHING from almost EVERYBODY, now the habit of proposing to a lady has been imported into our culture so much so that if a lady doesn't get proposed to she feels as though her guy is Jew. Let's attain some level of maturity please, let some things be heard of us.
